Vice-President Smith Back
from San Diego

A Letter Relative to the First-street Crossing.

No Intention to Use More Than Three Tracks.

The Carson and Colorado Talk Brings a Response from Bishop's Creek—The Question of Extension to Be Submitted to Mr. Mills.

First Vice-President C. W. Smith

turned yesterday from San Diego, to wind up his business here, preparatory to sailing East. He has to reach Chicago on the afternoon of the 16th, to attend an important meeting next morning; so he leaves here at 7 o'clock this morning, to go directly to Chicago.

A TIMES representative found Mr. Smith yesterday afternoon busily engaged, but ready as always to give a moment's inter-

"How did you find things down in San Diego, Mr. Smith?"

"Well, the work is going on satisfactorily there, and the country is improving fast."

"I see it is reported in San Diego that the Santa Fé, or California Southern, will run a line down to Ensenada."

"Nonsense! There is no truth whatever in the story."

"And I see that this morning's Call announces that you are going up to San Francisco with Mr. Babcock, to confer with

There is nothing in that, either. Instead of going to San Francisco, I am going to start tomorrow morning direct for Chicago, over our own line."

AS TO FIRST STREET.

The following official letter from Vice President Smith to Mayor Workman, speaks for itself:

CALIFORNIA CENTRAL RAILROAD.
OFFICE OF VICE-PRESIDENT,
NATIONAL CITY (Cal.). June 9, 1887.

Hon. W. H. Workman, Mayor of Los Angeles City, Los Angeles, Cal.—DEAR SIR: Again referring to the subject of locating our tracks across First street, I am pleased to advise you that as soon as our depots grounds are graded and our yard system of tracks put in proper condition for use, it is the purpose of this company to have both three permanent tracks crossing First street; and I will further say that the placing of tracks, and general switching of handling of freight and passenger cars will all be done with the utmost care and efficiency.

street—in other words, no switching will be done over First street that can possibly be avoided. And for the further protection of the public or citizens traveling on First street, two sets of automatic gates will be placed, one immediately at the end of First street bridge, and the other immediately west of the west track crossing the street, all of which will be put into operation as rapidly as it is possible to do so.

Very respectfully yours,
C. W. SMITH, Vice-President.

Vice-President Smith also had an interview yesterday afternoon with Mayor Workman with regard to First street. Mr. Smith expressed the determination of the company to act harmoniously with the city. As to the viaduct proposition, Mr. Smith agreed that the Santa Fe would bear one-third of the expense if the city and the Los Angeles Cable Railway Company will bear the other two-thirds.

THE C. AND O.
Response from Bishop's Creek to the Board of Trade.
On May 28th Mr. A. M. Lawrence, secretary of the Board of Trade, addressed a letter to Mr. L. Case, of Bishop Creek, Inyo county, Cal., who has evinced a great interest in working up the idea of the extension of the Carson and Colorado Railroad from Keeler to Molave, asking information in regard to the following points:

First—The number of miles operated by the Carson and Colorado Railroad and the two terminal points.

Second—Character of country through which the Carson and Colorado Railroad runs, with names of principal towns.

Third—Character of freight handled.

Fourth—Estimate of population along the line of the Carson and Colorado Railroad.

Fifth—Character of the country between the terminus at Keelar and Mojave, and Sixth—A general description of the production of the entire country, and what has to be law from other sections.

Seventh—A comparative estimate of the title land still unoccupied, and what is suitable for.

In reply Mr. Lawrence received the following letter:

BISHOP CREEK, INYO COUNTY (Cal.)
June 2.—A. M. Lawrence, Secretary of the Los Angeles Board of Trade—DEAR SIR:

Yours of May 28th reached me today. I have enlisted several of our best-informed business men, who will proceed to help collect the information asked for. It will be ready to mail within ten days. Respectfully,
L. C. CASE

P. S. It is now decided to have the business attended to thoroughly and the report printed, and a dozen copies sent you.
L. C.

Since receiving the above, Mr. Lawrence has received a copy of the Sagebrush State

"I hope to give you some definite information as to the extension of the Cam and Colorado Railroad southerly within a short time. Mr. D. O. Mills, who is principal stockholder of the company, and will remain on the coast for several months. The matter will doubtless receive early consideration at the hands of himself and associates. Our president, Mr. H. Yerrington, goes to San Francisco this evening, and will hand your communication to Mr. Mills for his consideration."

From a cattle standpoint the great benefit to be derived from having direct communication with Los Angeles cannot be adequately comprehended. Southern California, of which Los Angeles is the commercial center, is filling up with cattle and the markets are measure by Arizona stockmen, communication, our stockmen will succeed in supplying mahogany beef of the best of much chance, when compared to sagebrush product, as a Yuma.

The Carson, Colorado, and Railroad sounds well.

The possibilities of the Angeleno will draw the direct from the market.

WASHINGTON.

REVISED AFTER THIRTY-TWO YEARS' ABSENCE.

Notes of the National Drill and Decoration Day—Scenes at Logan's Tomb—The Los Angeles Tribune—Mount Vernon—A Suggestion.

WASHINGTON, June 4.—[To the Editor of THE TIMES.] I came to Washington, this time, as a good many average American citizens came to the national drill, on a cheap excursion—one of 50 from Chattanooga, on a "combination" ticket. We have no separate pieces of pasteboard as tokens of our right to travel—our names are engraved on the back of a long strip of paper, and we have to be identified by our "leader." This system of human transportation en masse, by inventory, is said to be one way the railroad men kick against the Interstate Law. We had hoped to enjoy the "picturesque route" through the Shenandoah Valley—but, alas! the B. & O. wouldn't connect, and we were put through on the Piedmont Air Line, of no earthly interest whatever. Strange to say, our "combination" ticket was kinder to our baggage than to ourselves. Our trunks and gripbags, blind to scenery, were sent via the Natural Bridge, Surry, etc. Next time some of us ambitious lovers propose to climb into our trunks and peep out of the keyholes!

I was here thirty-two years ago, but on this, my later visit to the capital, I find so many things that are a surprise and pleasure to me that I am almost jolted down a few of them for your readers.

The bright, well-worn star in the floor of the Potomac Railroad station, which marks the tragic spot where Garfield fell, and the tablet on the wall, which gives the date of the horrid deed, solemnize the pilgrim at his advent into Washington. With the first step, however, out into the streets the grandeur of our capital begins to grow up in the mind. The feet—if you start out at foot—on the wheels—find the asphalt the perfection of a pavement. Smooth and hard and noiseless, it is the paradise of carriages and cabs, of hacks, and herules, and hansom, of bicycles and tricycles. No city in the world has so many miles of easy-walking, easy-driving streets—a most pleasurable impression to begin with. But the glories are not all superficial. The triumphs of the American as a building animal next attract the attention. The architecture of Washington is now a study and a delight to everybody. The old classic style of public buildings, which I found more than a quarter of a century ago, is now the object of special interest. Their lack of "looming up" is charming. The Treasury building, like Tenison's ancestral chapel, seems "slowly sinking into the ground." The "super-plus" is too much for it. In fact, a subterranean vault, the largest in the world, is now being dug beneath it, for the superabundant silver accumulating under this (alleged) surplus-hating Administration. All the old edifices have a squat appearance, and it is hard to understand why they were so broadcast over the city instead of being clustered around the Capitol or arranged in stately grandeur along Pennsylvania avenue, connecting the legislative halls with the Executive Mansion. But what is lost in symmetry is, perhaps, more than made up by the quaint effects of contrast as one wanders about the building "War, Navy and State—lives itself grandly toward the skies, and the Baltimore Sun building, with its steeply-crowned eight stories, relieves the depressing effect of Washington's earlier architecture. That a magnificent city is now becoming, with its private palaces, its statue-graced squares and circles, its numerous verdant terraces, its stately blocks with terra-cotta fronts set in the living green of the garden, with its "All things, including 'Boss' Shepherd' blameworthy as they may have been in many things—have worked together for good to make this city the pride of the continent, if not of the world.

The view from the removed Capitol with its matchless dome, compels a profound admiration. Twenty squares away to the west, as you gaze downward from the dome, stand the stately homes of Washington—"Castle Stewart," built by the States; "Blaine's splendid pile," what is called the noblest mansion of them all; Mrs. Patten's, of California; "Sunset" Cox's quaintly magnificent residence, half oriental, half Queen Anne in its style of architecture and humor; and others just as fine but not as famous for ownership. There, too, are all the foreign legations, Russian and French and German and English and Chinese, the latter symbolized by the imperial dragon crowning its eagle portiere. East of the Capitol the foundations of the two-and-a-quarter-million library are being laid. At last there is hope ahead for the indefatigable Spofford. He told me that he hoped to move out of his present literary clutter-house in three years; others place the date of completion from five to ten years. As I looked into Mr. Spofford's hollow eyes and saw his white hair and worn expression of face, I feared he would not live to install the treasures he has collected, and knows so well, in their new palatial quarters. The western front of the Capitol will be greatly beautified when the solid marble walls that are now in process of construction, to supplant the former earth terraces, are finished. Meanwhile W. W. Story's statue of Chief Justice Marshall stands in unmoved dignity amid the surrounding chaos of stone and mortar.

The 555 feet of the soaring shaft to the great and good G. W. I couldn't climb. And why? No elevator, no electric lights. Too much "economy" in the last Congress to pay for 'em; and it wouldn't do to allow me to go up with my tallow-dip and chip off souvenirs. During the last week the mighty monument has looked down upon hundreds of white tents—the bivouac of our young citizen soldiery from many States. It has served them as a stupendous signal to mark their hours of work and play. The "drill," despite its little flaws and frictions, has been a success. Perhaps the pleasantest feature of the grand review, when the President and "Mrs. Frances" and their little sons, each evening, blew and beat for their sweet serenade with all their grateful breath and fingers.

Where to go? "Memorial day" was a hard thing to decide. Arlington had its 16,000 martyred heroes to be honored; but Logan's tomb, at Rock Creek Cemetery, near the Soldier's Home, was to be reopened, so the eager crowds were divided. We assembled at the hero's vault. Outside and in it was laden with floral tributes from Maine to California. Los Angeles' memorial had honorable mention and place. The exercises—military, oratorical and musical—were convincing proof of the love and veneration in which the memory of the brave Logan is held. Especially pathetic was the "Soldier's Farewell," sung by the Colored Octette Club of Washington, and the unvarying claron call of this battle bugle in front of the unassuming tomb. This temporary resting-place of Logan's remains is a wonderfully quaint and interesting old spot on account of its church erected, in 1719, of bricks brought from British shores.

The last excursion has been to Mt. Vernon. Our little party of two felt a sense of chagrin not to find a California room in the sacred old mansion. The pioneer States, in restoring the classic premises, have occupied all the house rooms, but the old family outside kitchen affords a splendid theater for the display of patriotic devotion. Let California show how the Father of his Country fed himself and cooked his famous diplomatic dinners by hunting up all the old kettles and saucepans possible. Already the great hominy mortar, the tea-kettle and the hooks and crane on which it hung are there. This is good, serious advice, worth taking, and we hope it will not be lost on Justice Fields, who is on the advisory board of the "Ladies' Mt. Vernon Association."

We found on board the W. W. Caravan, on our trip to Mt. Vernon, a son of Mayor Holmes, of Pasadena. The young gentleman is making an extensive eastern tour, and we were pleased to meet and talk once more with a Los Angeleno.

J. A. BREWSTER.

The Street Procession Marshal.

[Chicago Tribune.] See the street procession marshal in his pride!

He's entirely unaccustomed to bestride. Anything except some hobby he may ride; He'd be happy but for this one awful fact: He's affected by the way his steed may act, And he feels as if his vertebrae were cracked.

Between the man and horse, as they pass by, Frenzied, careless, unaccustomed eye May catch a glimpse of building or sky; As the charger prances gayly down the street, Churning up and down in his uneasy seat, Bobs the marshal, in an agony complete.

The hat upon his head's a shiny plug, Though it fails to give expression grave and smug. For it's laid over on his reddened mug; But his charger's not a plug—the thing's accused!

Too full of life he's thought it from the first; How he wishes their positions were reversed!

For he knows he'd rather lug the horse See the street procession marshal in his pride!

Total Wreck.

[Tombstone Epitaph.] John O'Dougherty, superintendent of the Total Wreck mine, arrived in Tombstone yesterday for the purpose of securing the services of some experienced miners to work on the Total Wreck. Mr. O'Dougherty left yesterday, taking with him four miners, who will be employed on the mine. The Epitaph can assure the men of one thing, that is, in all of this broad Territory, no more honorably conscientious man than the superintendent can be found. This property has in the past paid a large amount of dividends, one payment being made on the 15th of May, 1887, when it will pay many more in the future.

Special Announcement. The first grade in the price of Ivanhoe lots was made last week, as per advertisement for several months. For various good reasons, some of the lots are left at the old price for another month; but most of them have been advanced 20 to 50 per cent. Even at advanced prices, they are the best property offered for the money anywhere around Los Angeles, and buyers should act before the price goes up the next advance, which will be made in July. The sale of lots in May was larger than in any previous month, and the end of June will be the most of the lots sold. All who see Ivanhoe agree that it is the best property in the city, and that it is the best property in the city, and that it is the best property in the city.

Phenomenal Success. Has been attained in selling small lots at large prices in many places far from the city. But those who have not yet seen the Ivanhoe have yet to see the largest and finest building lots near the city, and on one side the price of the lots elsewhere. The dummy road and the water system are nearly completed. 27 West First street.

On account of the increased travel east, the Santa Fe route has arranged for extra Pullman cars on their through Kansas City trains. They are also running their elegant tourist sleeping cars direct from Los Angeles to Kansas City direct.

550—Beautiful Rosecrans—$50. Almost gone, these fine lots, at $50 each, in the Rosecrans tract. Free conveyances every day. Rooms 8 and 9, Wilson block. This is positively the last week that lots will be sold for $50.

The Dummy Road. Through Ivanhoe, it is now being completed, and 25,000 feet of 2-inch pipe is being laid in the streets. Those who fail to buy now will pay more for lots next month. 27 West First street.

Glendale Stage. Leaves office of Ben E. Ward, 4 Court street, daily at 8 a.m. and 4 p.m., sharp. Round trip 75 cents.

Recesses. Saturday will be the last day that you can buy lots at $50.

WOMAN AND HOME.

POLLY OF BRING OLD-YOUNG WOMEN.

When a Mother Should Be to Her Daughters—Association of the Old and Young—How to Keep Young—The Home Life.

We are better for sometimes letting the world in at our doors. There are sweet influences from the outside that will broaden and brighten the atmosphere of home. Other lives brought into the home circle now and then serve to quicken us and bring us into larger friendship with those about us.

I like the pleasant small feasts where a few congenial guests gather, and where the time is passed without any undue ceremony and formality. Where these older guests are present, I would not shut the children out. If not old enough to help entertain, I would have them free to sit quietly where they may hear our talk of books and men and women and the world at large. There is no better school than this hour or two in the parlor where conversation runs upon worthy topics and does not degenerate into mere gossip.

There is a tendency in society which I must confess I do not like, and that is the very decided line of separation that is drawn between the young and middle-aged and old people. The rising generation is coming to feel that they do not care to mix socially very much with their elders. The old-fashioned way of inviting friends, without regard to age, was a better one than the class exclusiveness of the present day. There is no necessity of people's mentality changing with advancing years. The best of the middle-aged may be as young as that of the girls and boys, if they live rightly. Young people and old people's parties are all right enough sometimes, but I think if the two should mingle more frequently together, the old would retain longer the freshness of youthful feeling and a generous sympathy with the young, while the young would learn wisdom and the art of growing old beautifully. I know women, advanced in years, who are as great favorites with their young friends as are those of their own age. They are like fruit delicious in their ripeness, and beautiful in their perfected charms. They are welcome everywhere where youth and gladness is, no less than in maturer circles. Every woman should try to keep alive her interest in the world. Even if she is conscious of a little more effort in going out, she should not let that deter her from going. With that consciousness it is easy to fall into the habit of home-staying, but this is not wise. When a woman loses her grasp upon outside interests she grows old quickly. She should not yield to the inclination which would lead her to withdraw almost entirely from the outside active duties and social pleasures of life. If she has young daughters she owes it to them to keep step with the world about her. When their young friends come in she must not withdraw herself entirely from them. Let her contribute to their entertainment, extend to them her sympathy and fellowship, and enter into their hopes and purposes. Their companionship will be like the elixir of life to her, and if she has kept her heart young her presence will add to their delight. Of course there will be times when she will feel that it is best to leave them to themselves; but if she is the woman that she ought to be they will never regard her presence as a restraint or a drawback upon their pleasures.

A mother should be a friend, counselor and companion to her daughters, always ready with her sympathy, and always interested in whatever interests them. It is a sad thing to see so many young old women as we have, women who have lost all of their vivacity and brightness, and who live like mere automatons, dull and dreary lives, without hope or gladness. Such things ought not to be.

NOTES.

Potato Croquettes.—Work two cups mashed potato well with a tablespoon of melted butter until smooth and soft, then add two eggs beaten to a froth and beat altogether with a wooden spoon for several minutes. Season to suit, and make into balls or rolls with floured hands. Roll each in egg and breadcrumb and fry in boiling lard. As soon as done drain on a paper.

Coffee Cakes.—One cup sweet milk, two of sugar, one of butter, three well-beaten eggs, two teaspoonsful of baking powder worked into enough flour to make a stiff dough; roll out thin and sift ground cinnamon on the sheet, and roll up into a wide band, above the roll and place on tins. Before baking sprinkle rather thickly dry white sugar on top of the slices.

Drumstick for Screen or Easel.—One yard and a half of China silk, finished at the ends with wide hem above which is a broad band of plush of a contrasting shade. Tie in a large, loose knot, with one end falling much shorter than the other. The longer end is decorated with small balls arranged to hang in a row from the edge of the hem and from the lower edge of the band.

Cheep Fruit Cake.—One cupful of sugar, one-half cupful of molasses, one cupful of buttermilk or sour milk, two and one-half cups of flour, one cupful of chopped raisins, one-half cupful of currants, two tablespoonsful of butter, one teaspoonful of soda dissolved in water, one-half teaspoonful each of cloves, cinnamon and nutmeg. Bake in a moderate oven about forty minutes.

Strawberry Blanc Manger.—Spread a quart of strawberries on a broad dish, stew them over thickly with pulverized sugar, and let them stand for five or six hours, or until the juice has been well drawn from them. Then make a blanc manger with gelatine, sweeten it to taste, and stir in the juice of the berries. Mix all well together, pour the mixture into a damp mold and place on the ice till set.

West Buckle.—Arrange three arrows with their heads downward, and tie to them with ribbon a little above the middle. Fasten three fine brass rods across the arrows, just at the ends of the feathers, from which suspend a net of cord. Ribbons are run up the middle and tied in bows at the ends of each arrow. The arrows may be gilded or painted in any desired color, and the ribbons may be in one or more colors.

Strawberry Fillers.—Beat two eggs with the whites and yolks separately, then add to them a teaspoonful of cream and a pinch of salt, stirring in enough sugar to make a thick batter. Now beat the mixture well, and when thoroughly mixed draw in a bowl of strawberries, and pour the batter of boiling-hot fat in the center of each berry.

serve on a napkin, with sifted sugar strewn over the tops.

Stewed Custard.—Put one pint of milk, one pint of cream, quarter of a pound of white sugar, and a stick of cinnamon in a farina kettle and set on the fire; when the mixture begins to boil pour in the yolks of ten eggs, having previously beaten them up in a few spoonfuls of cold milk; keep stirring the mixture till it begins to boil again; then take out the cinnamon and stir in the whites, previously well beaten, stirring quickly all the time to prevent running over; when done put it into a dish garnished with small cakes.

Hamburg Steak.—Scrape the lean meat from the sinews of a rump steak; season it with salt and pepper and form it into flat round cakes; mince an onion and fry it brown in butter; then fry the steaks in this until they are delicate brown in color. They may be rare or well-done, according to taste. Gravy or sauce, plentiful, is served with them. This sauce is easily made. Put into the pan in which the steaks were cooked one tablespoonful of shallot, one tablespoonful of minced parsley, half a salt-spoonful of black pepper, a little salt, three tablespoonfuls of vinegar, and a cup of broth or stock; simmer for a few minutes, strain and serve with the steak.

COLLEGE AND OTHER NOTES.

UNIVERSITY PLACE, June 11.—[Correspondence of THE TIMES.]

The commencement exercises of the University will begin Sunday, June 19th, President Bovard preaching the baccalaureate sermon. The annual meeting of the board of directors will be held on Monday, at 2 p.m., and the literary exercises of the Aristotelean Society in the evening. The annual council will be held on Tuesday. On Wednesday the instrumental and vocal recital will be given, as also the exercises of the Athene Society. The crowning exercises will be on Thursday. Three gentlemen and six ladies will receive on that day the tangible and ocular evidence of their mastery of the several branches of science, art and literature to which they have applied their minds for the years past. It is expected that among the able speakers who will be present during the week will be Abel Stevens, D.D., LL.D., late of Paris, France. Mr. Stevens has been for nearly a half-century one of the most distinguished scholars and recognized historians. The $8000 schoolhouse voted by the residents of this school district will, all probability, be located near Vermont avenue. By the way, this schoolhouse creates more general satisfaction among the more intelligent class of people, not only in this immediate vicinity, but throughout the district, than anything that has happened for this many a day.

A new business block is being built at Park Station, making it look somewhat as though business would lead her to withdraw almost entirely from the outside active duties and social pleasures of life. If she has young daughters she owes it to them to keep step with the world about her. When their young friends come in she must not withdraw herself entirely from them. Let her contribute to their entertainment, extend to them her sympathy and fellowship, and enter into their hopes and purposes. Their companionship will be like the elixir of life to her, and if she has kept her heart young her presence will add to their delight. Of course there will be times when she will feel that it is best to leave them to themselves; but if she is the woman that she ought to be they will never regard her presence as a restraint or a drawback upon their pleasures.

A Good Investment. I have for sale, for a few days only, a tract of 100 acres of choice land, four miles from railroad station and one mile from projected road, soon to be built. The soil is a rich, sandy loam, admirably adapted to the cultivation of citrus fruit, and in a locality free from scale and smut. Price, $80 per acre. M. H. Vernon, 14 North Spring street.

Six Miles from Town—$50 Lots. No interest and no low, flat land, but a gentle level slope, and the town of Rosemead, California, is only 10 miles away. Carriages leave daily at 10 a.m. Rooms 8 and 10, Wilson block, 24 West First street. This is positively the last week that lots will be sold for $50.

Mrs. Dr. Wells, Woman Specialist. The best in Kentucky, many years of successful practice in prostatic uteri, ulceration, leucorrhea, ovarian diseases, irregularities and radical change felt from the first treatment. No. 841 S. Spring st.

Brooklyn Colony. Lands at $5 an acre. Rooms 12 and 14, 28 S. Spring street.

OUR BOYS AND GIRLS.

THE STORY OF A LOVELY SUMMER BY THE SEA.

Sailing Along the Coast—A Summer Storm—The Witch's Sabbath—Green Trees and Meadows—Old Marblehead.

It was a lovely June morning, and the cool breezes blew up from the Atlantic, and the green uplands were covered with rich grasses, and all the meadows were full of clover, round which the zigzag fences stretched, and over these the cows, which stood chewing their cud, thrust their long necks, and looked, with sleepy eyes, the picture of content and idleness. It seemed as if the smell of the clover was enough for them, and as if, perhaps, they had visions of the great loads of hay that later the farmer would gather from the meadow levels and store up for them in barns for their winter feed.

The flies buzzed in the sunshine, and the grasshoppers took long leaps by the roadside. The trees dropped shadows that looked invitingly cool. There were dandelions and buttercups in the pastures, and by the brown and white farmhouses you would see the hens, and catch a glimpse of well-fed pigs in their sty. All the little gardens in the front of the village houses were full of flowers—roses and hollyhocks, pinks and sunflowers everywhere. Then there were green hedges, and picket-fences all painted white, and hanging as prim as Quakers. And further on in the country were stone walls and rail fences, and fences built of the roots of old trees. In the shady corners about these little mosses grew sometimes, and then where the sunshine brightest were pretty sweetbush bushes, full of fragrant wild roses that made the air sweet as if they had nothing to do but to breathe perfume and brightness.

Just out of town was the old wooden depot. It was long and rambling, and it had never been touched by a bit of paint. But still the white platform outside was pleasant, for such a lovely air from the sea swept up to it. It was as cool as if it had come from a thousand miles over the water, and smelt as delightfully charming, so salty and pure that no wonder some travelers who had been riding for hours in the cars, in the dust and the heat all the way from Boston and beyond, declared this was just the place to stop, and they were sure that they should be content there. "It is just like getting away from the world," said one of them, a pale girl from the city, who had never smelt the sea before, and who had no idea of the salt, rosy country gardens, nor of wide meadows, and green cornfields with their silken banners.

"I am glad that we are to stop here," she said. So she and a friend with two little girls, and a young man with flaxen hair and blue eyes, as blue as the sea that stretched away beyond, got out and went into the brown depot, and sat down for a few minutes on one of the long wooden benches.

Shortly, the young man went out in search of some kind of conveyance that would take them down across the narrow way to the pretty stretch of land that lay beyond, washed on all sides by the bright blue ocean, and called Marblehead Neck.

By and by a queer-fashioned hack was found, driven by a quaint old man, who had lived all his life there, and who every day, all the year round, drove up to the depot with his steady trotters in search of passengers.

Into this long cart-like conveyance these five happy people climbed that pleasant summer morning and set out for the Neck.

There was a great deal of shipping in the harbor—fishing smacks, and lumber schooners, and some big merchant vessels, and down by the black wharves were boys with their rods, and little dorys were sailing about filled with pleasure-seekers. All along the shore were old, old houses, that looked as if they must have been built for a century. The driver took them through narrow, crooked streets, which seemed to be running every way. Main street, he said, was built along an old cowpath. And I should think it might have been, for it wound around corners and sharp curves, as if the cattle had turned here and there to get to the forest trees, or had wandered to the one side to snatch a bit of fresh dewy grass.

But the road that led from the old town of Marblehead to the Neck ran straight across the water. It was a farmhouse and some tall trees. And then the road ran beyond the farmhouse, always near the water on one side, while on the other were white tents in the distance, and small cottages, where people came from the city and dined for the one side to snatch a bit of fresh dewy grass.

Out beyond the farmhouses the pretty summer watering-place was all fenced in, and little children stood by the great gate to let the people pass through. The gate was opened for the travelers by black-eyed little girls and boys, each with happy faces as they gathered up the pennies that were thrown to them, and which later they spent for sweetmeats and ice cream.

To the left of the drive now the great sea rolled; to the right were the meadows and the summer cottages, with wide verandas, and here and there a carriage that had come from the city. There were little crowds on the beach, and far off over the water an island, with a castle-like looking building, and down the Neck the old lighthouse, where summer and winter dwelt, an old man and his wife, lonely enough in the winter time, but enjoying the bustle and the stir that filled everything when the summer came.

It did not take our friends long to get settled in their four-roomed cottage. There were two cool chambers, where the ladies and children slept, and the young men took the large, breezy living-room downstairs, and slept on the broad lounge.

In front of the cottage was a point called "The Churn." The sea wall here was about thirty feet above the water at low tide, but in a storm the sea came thundering in, and it had opened a crevice among the rocks where it came rolling in, and dashing its spray five feet into the air. It was as if an awful wild beast were let loose and was gnawing away at the rocks and splitting them into fragments.

That was a lovely summer when the days were fair, and the young folks

NEW YORK, June 11.—Wheat: The market opened firmer this morning on unfavorable crop reports and sympathy with a stronger California market. The market was soon lost, and July, which opened at 85 1/2, and sold up to 85 1/2, reacted to 85 1/2. It was a terrible superstitious, and hundreds of these supposed witches were put to death right here in Salem," said mamma.

"It almost makes me afraid now," replied the little girl, as she looked about her.

"You need not be, for that was hundreds of years ago, and there is no witchcraft here now," replied mamma, comfortingly.

There were terrible storms there by the sea that summer, and ships were struck by lightning, and one man was killed just beyond the long line of white road, and once there was a fearful tornado, and the people thought that all the cottages would be blown into the sea.

"O, mamma," said the little girl, "I never shall forgive you for bringing me here if I am killed."

Mamma stood by the door with her waterproof on, and her hand on the doorknob, ready to rush out into the storm if she heard a crash as if the housewalls were giving way. And they were all dressed like her, and stood beside her while the wooden sides of the cottage were cursed and bent like a rainbow by the force of the wind. But the storm passed over, and soon the sun came out, and the world was lovely again.

"I should think the witches had got all their spells washed this time," remarked the little girl. Mamma smiled, and said that it was so she need not fear any more storms. The next day was lovely, and they chartered a ship and went with some friends sailing along the coast as far as Gloucester.

And so the summer passed, and all were sorry when they had to go away from pretty Marblehead Neck, and the quaint old town across the harbor, that was so full of interest and life all the days of witchcraft. To look at it one would think that it had a story to tell, and would wish that they could hear it. E. A. O.

Dueling in Paris.

An entertaining article on "Dueling in Paris" is one of the strong features of the March Harper's. It is written by a Parisian authority, Theodore Child, and is capably illustrated by a Parisian artist, Henri Dupray. Mr. Child claims that "never has the rapier been held in higher honor in France than at the present day; never has the art of fencing been taught with more science, and learned with greater avidity, and perhaps never since the time of Richelieu and the Fronde has dueling been more common in France. In spite of the successive and severe edicts of Henry IV, Cardinal Richelieu, and Louis XIV, in spite of the condemnation of Rousseau and Voltaire, in spite of the prohibition of law and of religion, dueling has remained since the sixteenth century, not only tolerated, but approved by public opinion." The explanation of this characteristic, distinguishing France from all other nations, is said to be the proverbial sensitiveness of the French sense of honor, the survival of the combative spirit of chivalry, and the national trait to which Montaigne refers when he wrote, "Put three Frenchmen together in the deserts of Libya, and before a month has passed they will be tearing each other's eyes out."

The modern French code of honor is mentioned, which allows the slightest offense to provoke a duel, and "makes a fight with rapiers or pistols obligatory upon every journalist and politician. Gambetta's famous duel with M. de Broglie for the first time fully and faithfully narrated. One of the illustrations represents the actual scene of exchanging pistol-shots at thirty paces, and another shows Gambetta shooting sparrows from his window. The explanation of the duel is given, illustrated by a full-page engraving, is the celebrated duel in the rain between the critic Saint-Beuve and the journalist M. Dubois, in which Saint-Beuve insisted on holding his umbrella as a shield as his pistol, saying: "I am quite ready to be killed, but I do not wish to catch cold." Both adversaries shot four times, but, as is usually the case, neither was harmed.

The American Singers Abroad.

These song birds from America, they come across the sea to sing to the hearts of the great sea rolled; to the right were the meadows and the summer cottages, with wide verandas, and here and there a carriage that had come from the city. Senator Sherman's Military Record. It is not generally known that Senator Sherman has a military record. He raised a brigade of infantry, cavalry and artillery in Ohio during the first year of the war, which he commanded as a colonel until President Lincoln wrote that there were plenty of men to command troops, but few who would take the (Sherman's) place in the Senate.
